To the beach!

Monday morning is the time for the traditional beach photo. Keys for the selected cars will be distributed just after breakfast, and we need many volunteers for the task to drive the cars to the selected spot on the beach.

The picture shooting, which is headed by Karsten M. Lemche (DK) will probably take around an hour and a half. When the big picture is secured, all Jurors/-photographers are invited to do their individual photos from the lift. The pictures will be available to all participants on tannistest.com.

Due to the photo session, there will be a limited number of test cars until lunch.

Test the steering wheel

The Lexus RZ is equipped with the new steering wheel 'One Motion Grip' which can be driven on normal roads. But due to the fact that the system software is not yet finalized, the RZ can not be included in the Elk-test at Sindal Airport Tuesday morning.

Lights on!

Monday is the chance to take a drive in the darkness (which we have in plenty of supply around here) and test the lights of the cars.

Lights are not just lights these days, and even just observing the cars standing still can tell a story. And so is the increasing advanced lightning inside.

Cars are available from 20.00 onwards Monday and Tuesday.

Small boy in big trouble

A little boy was hit by a car Sunday afternoon – right in front of Tannishus. In fact, he was hit several times, as not all test cars here are able to brake fully autonomous for a small person behind the car. Others just warns, and some do nothing at all. The result from the rear AEB-test is available on tannistest.com

A quiet town – but not in summer

The base of the Tannistest is the twin towns of Tversted and Tannisby ('by' meaning town). The official number of citizens is just 544.

But as you can imagine, the number of people swell dramatically during summer, when thousands of summer guests arrive for the sea and the coast. Tannishus, where most of us stay, has been a seaside resort since 1896. That year the hotel had 13 rooms. Now here are 103 apartments.
